"Saddest thing I ever heard of," said one of the listeners, while others walked up and shook the victim's hand, too full for utterance.

AUBURN HAIR, WHITE HORSES.

A Boomerang Effect Resulting from an Error in a Telegram.

They were talking about the redheaded-girl-and-white-horse fad at the Kimball house the other night, says the Atlanta Constitution, when somebody told a good one on Sam Hardwick, whom everybody knows as general passenger agent of the Georgia Pacific. Sam was with a party of Birmingham friends not long ago—gay young society people they were, and all well known to everybody were, and all well known to everybody in the Magic city—when somebody started the white-horse story. One young lady in the party had ideal Titian hair, and the joke was of course at her expense. There were white horses everywhere. Every little station brought another white horse to add to the fair one's discomfort, and correspondingly to the happiness of the man who persisted in pointing them out. It was a white-horse day. Glimpses of was a white-horse day. Glimpses of them met the gaze of the party every-where, until the victim of all began to think that every horse and every mule in Alabama was of that, to her, detestible dressed this question to his wife, who Alabama was of that, to her, detestible color.

A bright idea struck Sam—hit him hard, in fact. "Now, I'll bet $200," said he to the white-horse man of the party, "that there won't be a white horse at the depot in Anniston when we get there." The bet was promptly taken and the coming to Anniston was eagerly looked forward to. In a few minutes Hardwick looked at his watch, and, murmuring something about "wanting to see the engineer" went forward. A minute later the train stopped at a little station. So intent was the party upon looking at some white mules in the distance that they didn't notice the brakeman, who hurried into the telegraph office and hurried out again. aressed this question to his whe, who sat near the bookcase.
"Yes," replied Mrs. McSwat.
"If it isn't too much trouble I wish you would look for the pronunciation of the word 'mirage."

Mrs. McSwat took down the dictionary, opened the bulky volume, consulted its few minutes and said: Mrs. McSwat turner another two.
"In a minute," she said. "While I am about it I'd like to find out the meaning of the word 'linoleum."
"Hurry up, Lobelia."
"I am hurrying. Let-me-see.
"Link," 'linnet,' 'linseed,' lint,' 'lion'—why, it isn't in the dictionary at all, Billiger. Isn't that queer?"
"Yes, yes. How much longer are you—" graph office and hurried out again. If all they seen the message he bore they would have read: "To Blank, agent, Anniston: Ten dollars to you if you have no white horses or mules at depot when train arrives." But they didn't see it.

Same was an love to the party church see it.

didn't see it.
Sam went back to the party chuckling to himself and admiriug his own cleverness. It was but a few minutes when they called "Anniston!" The young ladies looked out and laughed.
Sam's face wore a benign smile as he pushed one of the men aside, and pressing his face to the pane he saw—white horses everywhere! In all that concourse of drays and hacks every mule and every horse was white. A tap on and every horse was white. A tap on the shoulder aroused him. "Mr. Hardwick, I'm sorry"—it was the agent who spoke—"I'm sorry, but I could not get mineteen—" Sam jerked the telegram from his hand, but for a moment was speechless. Then without a word he handed a roll of bills to the man with whom he had bet. The telegraph operator had made the "no" read "20."

"Fenk and Weeble."

A friend of mine had an odd way of mixing her words. Perfectly uncon-scious of it, she would often make folks laugh. She would speak of feeling "feak and weeble," for weak and feeble, and "castor ill poils," for castor oil pills. But she was weak and feeble until she but she was weak and leave that she took that powerful, invigorating tonic, "Favorite Prescription," which so wonderfully imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. Half a dozen Rochester physicians were feeling particularly happy and exultant a few days ago. They had spent a delightful hour in making an examination of the body of a man killed in an accident, and were well pleased with each other and the gentleman who had furnished them with their scientific amusement. When they were through their work they adjourned to the office of one of their number and began telling experiences and reminiscenses. They told of exciting amputations and exhilarating operations until it came the turn of the oldest man present to speak. Then such a tale was unfolded as brought tears to the eyes of many present.

"When I was a young man," said the old physician, "I practiced in a western city. This was about thirty years ago. It was not a great while after I had my first case that I was called one day to attend a young man who had a most peculiarly shaped head. Under my care the fellow soon got well, but I cultivated his acquaintance to serve certain ends that I had in view.

"When I came to know the young man pretry well I told him frankly that I wanted his head. You all know that I have always made brain diseases a specialty, and I thought that the man's head, with its abnormal development would be a splendid subject for study. The chap fell in with my proposal. I gave him $300, and he made a will in which he mentioned me as the heir to his head. To be sure the fellow was young, but so was I, and I was willing to wait.
